Design Choices & Components

The design of the map is crafted to ensure clarity and ease of interpretation

- Chloropleth Map: A choropleth map is employed using folium to showcase the density of tourist attractions spots, employing a color gradient that communicates areas with high or low tourist activity. Along with it a tooltip for detailed information on the name and count of the city. This choice allows users to quickly discern patterns and make spatial associations.
- Marker Clusters: Hotels are represented as a custom icon  No description has been provided for this image on the map, with marker cluster functionality to manage visual clutter in areas with numerous lodging options. The size of these cluster points directly correlates with the number of hotels in a specific location, offering a quick glance at areas with a high concentration of accommodation choices.
- Marker Popups: Upon clicking  No description has been provided for this image it popups information about the hotel clicked on such as the name, image, price range, ratings represented as stars, and a URL that takes you to the booking site of the hotel.
- Widgets: The map's interactive elements, the ability to measure distances with the measure distance widget, and the layer widget to view the hotels without the choropleth map for better visualization, enhance user engagement, and exploration. These features contribute to a dynamic and informative user experience, allowing individuals to delve deeper into the spatial interplay between attractions and hotels in London.
- Tileset: Choosing Google Maps as the tileset for the interactive map was driven by its global familiarity, high-quality and detailed imagery, consistent user experience across platforms, and comprehensive coverage of locations. Leveraging Google Maps ensures users are comfortable with the interface, benefit from detailed and recognizable map visuals, and can seamlessly access the map on various devices. There is also an option to toggle between tile sets(open street map and google maps).
- Zoom & Fullscreen: Zoom feature empowers users to closely inspect specific areas of interest. By zooming in, the marker cluster scatters and users can explore intricate details, gaining an understanding of the distribution of tourist attractions and hotels in London. The inclusion of the Fullscreen plug , enriches the user experience by providing a dedicated fullscreen viewT this feature allows users to immerse themselves in the map, eliminating distractions and offering an expansive, unobstructed exploration of the intricate spatial relationships within the city.

Description of how your final interactive map works, its components and my design ideas: I use my map to direct me around. It develops into a depiction with multiple layers. First of all, it displays the well-known configuration of city streets and the identifiable urban grid. Then red markings appear to indicate rail stops and Metrolink. The map gently invites the viewer to think about getting around: "How might you travel? Are these paths accessible?" Then, blue indicators appear, each of which indicates a possible location for healthcare. Most importantly, some turn red. These serve as highlights among the wider possibilities, highlighting places that specialise in stress-related care. This illustrates how sensitive the map is to particular requirements. A window displaying information such as a name, services provided, and website link appears when a blue marker is clicked. The map offers the means for informed research rather than the definitive solution. It could happen that a group of markers close to a station suddenly makes
